Portfolio Manager Commentary

Ether fell over the first half of 2026, even as activity on the Ethereum network reached record levels.¹ A weaker market for the asset, set against heavier use of the network, defined the period.

Demand for ether was weak over the opening months of 2026. More money left the market than came in. Ether also moved onto exchanges at a faster pace, a pattern consistent with selling pressure.¹ In early June, a broad retreat from risk assets dragged the market lower.²

Use of the network moved the other way. The number of active wallets approached two million in February, more than at the peak of the 2021 rally, and other measures of network activity, including token transfers, set records too.¹ Ethereum also held more than half of the world's stablecoins.¹

The heavier use did not lift ether's price, and it did little for the fees earned by the main network. Much of the activity ran on lower-cost networks built on top of Ethereum, which passed only small fees back to it.¹ Through the first half, that activity stayed concentrated in a small number of these networks, while several smaller ones saw their deposits decline.³

Looking ahead, the network remains heavily used, even after a half in which ether's price fell and money left the market. The main open question for the sector is how much of the value created by that activity flows to ether itself, rather than to the networks built on top of it.

Recent Developments

In 2026, global financial markets have continued to navigate an environment characterized by elevated geopolitical risk, evolving trade policy, and shifting expectations for monetary policy. The ongoing military conflict between the United States and Iran has heightened geopolitical uncertainty, disrupting energy supplies and shipping routes and contributing to significant volatility in commodity and financial markets. At the same time, trade measures and related negotiations among major economies remain subject to change in scope and duration, while central banks continue to weigh inflation dynamics against the need to support economic growth. Together, these developments have contributed to periodic volatility across asset classes, particularly in sectors sensitive to energy prices, interest rates, currency movements, and global supply chains. The ultimate course and impact of these developments remain uncertain, and accordingly, the potential financial implications for investments cannot be reliably determined at this time.

4 This information is provided as at June 30, 2026, and December 31, 2025, 2024, 2023, 2022, and 2021.

5 Management expense ratio ("MER") is based on total expenses plus harmonized sales tax (excluding distributions, commissions and other portfolio transaction costs) for the stated period and is expressed as an annualized percentage of daily average net asset value during the period.

6 The trading expense ratio represents total commissions and other portfolio transaction costs expressed as an annualized percentage of average daily net assets during the period.

7 The Fund's portfolio turnover rate indicates how actively the Fund's portfolio manager trades its portfolio investments. A portfolio turnover rate of 100% is equivalent to the Fund buying and selling all of the securities in its portfolio once in the course of the period. The higher the Fund's portfolio turnover rate in a period, the greater the trading costs payable by the Fund in the period, and the greater the chance of an investor receiving taxable capital gains in the period. There is not necessarily a relationship between a high turnover rate and the performance of a fund.

Past Performance

The performance information does not take into account sales, redemption, distribution, income taxes payable by any unitholder or other optional charges that, if applicable, would have reduced returns or performance. The performance information shown assumes that all distributions made by the investment fund in the periods shown were reinvested in additional securities of the investment fund. How the Fund has performed in the past does not necessarily indicate how it will perform in the future.

The bar chart below shows the Canadian Dollar Unhedged and US Dollar Unhedged ETF Units' performance for each of the financial years shown and for the six-month period ended June 30, 2026. The chart shows, in percentage terms, how much an investment made in the Fund on the first day of each financial period would have grown or decreased by the last day of that financial period.
