Portfolio Manager Commentary

The technology sector dropped early in the year, recovered to record highs through the spring, then eased again in June. Three forces shaped the period. A geopolitical shock struck in late February, spending on artificial intelligence drove the recovery that followed, and questions about whether that spending would last emerged in June.

In late February, the United States and Israel launched strikes against Iran, and equity markets sold off around the world.[1] Oil prices and government bond yields rose in the weeks that followed, which weighed on the sector's growth-oriented shares.[1] The selling eased as the conflict carried into the spring, and the major indexes climbed back to record highs.[1]

That recovery was led by spending on artificial intelligence. In late May, NVIDIA reported record quarterly revenue, up 85% from a year earlier, as sales of its data-center chips nearly doubled.[2] NVIDIA's shares slipped after the report, despite those record results.[2]

Those questions intensified in early June, when Broadcom kept its full-year AI chip sales forecast unchanged, though investors had looked for an increase.[3] The Nasdaq Composite posted its steepest one-day fall since April 2025, with chip stocks leading the decline and the selling spreading to memory shares.[3]

Looking ahead, whether demand keeps pace with the heavy spending on AI remains to be seen after June. The higher oil prices and bond yields tied to the February conflict remain a further risk into the second half of the year.[1] That spending nonetheless remains the sector's main support, having carried revenue at its largest suppliers to record levels through the spring.[2]

Recent Developments

In 2026, global financial markets have continued to navigate an environment characterized by elevated geopolitical risk, evolving trade policy, and shifting expectations for monetary policy. The ongoing military conflict between the United States and Iran has heightened geopolitical uncertainty, disrupting energy supplies and shipping routes and contributing to significant volatility in commodity and financial markets. At the same time, trade measures and related negotiations among major economies remain subject to change in scope and duration, while central banks continue to weigh inflation dynamics against the need to support economic growth. Together, these developments have contributed to periodic volatility across asset classes, particularly in sectors sensitive to energy prices, interest rates, currency movements, and global supply chains. The ultimate course and impact of these developments remain uncertain, and accordingly, the potential financial implications for investments cannot be reliably determined at this time.

5 This information is provided as at June 30, 2026, and December 31, 2025, 2024, and 2023.

6 Management expense ratio (“MER”) is based on total expenses plus harmonized sales tax (excluding distributions, commissions and other portfolio transaction costs) for the stated period and is expressed as an annualized percentage of daily average net asset value during the period.

7 The trading expense ratio represents total commissions and other portfolio transaction costs expressed as an annualized percentage of average daily net assets during the period.

8 The Fund’s portfolio turnover rate indicates how actively the Fund’s portfolio manager trades its portfolio investments. A portfolio turnover rate of 100% is equivalent to the Fund buying and selling all of the securities in its portfolio once in the course of the period. The higher the Fund’s portfolio turnover rate in a period, the greater the trading costs payable by the Fund in the period, and the greater the chance of an investor receiving taxable capital gains in the period. There is not necessarily a relationship between a high turnover rate and the performance of a fund.

Past Performance

The performance information does not take into account sales, redemption, distribution, income taxes payable by any unitholder or other optional charges that, if applicable, would have reduced returns or performance. The performance information shown assumes that all distributions made by the investment fund in the periods shown were reinvested in additional securities of the investment fund. How the Fund has performed in the past does not necessarily indicate how it will perform in the future.
